Everything But The Main Thing

In his warming-up exercises for the 1959 battle of the budget, President Eisenhower has let it be known that spending for defense must not and will not be reduced and will be larger in all probability.

That pretty well takes the steam out of the President's assurance that income and outgo can be balanced, starting July 1.

It is the same as saying Congress can search for buried treasure as long as it does not dig in the ground. The only hope for a balanced budget when spending for defense accounts for more than half of all spending is in military expenditures. All the relatively small cutbacks that might be made elsewhere are of no importance compared with the overwhelming size of the defense item.

But because the armament race with the Soviet Union has become an obsession. Congress is not likely to argue with Mr. Eisenhower that military spending is untouchable. Representatives and senators will be inclined to agree with him; they will be inclined to spend more money for defense, not less.

They would need to spend more, not less, to make up for the shrinkage in dollar value, even if no new activities were started and if all the shifting back and forth among existing activities came out even. Inflation is as much to be feared as economy.

The only sure way to reduce defense spending would be to get rid of the armament race with the Soviet Union, and that is not likely.

But a taxpayer in the United States can wonder as he reads about the cancellation of missile projects that have not panned out and the obsolescence of the B-36 bomber fleet whether the armament race, itself, is not subject to closer control and tighter planning. It is axiomatic, at least among taxpayers who wear civilian clothes, that there is no point of satiety in military spending. The militarists never have enough, and they always can justify their demands for more with the threat of what might happen if they were caught short.

Nothing panics a congressman like the thought of being stingy about national defense. It is this instinct of political and national self-preservation that has made defense spending untouchable. Yet, until it is made as touchable as any other budget item, the possibility of balancing the budget without tax boosts, which also panic congressmen, is too remote to be worth considering.

People Were In A Mood To Buy

A last-minute roundup of retail sales by The Wall Street Journal revealed this consensus on the popular mood during Christ-

People were in a mood to buy.

Sales statistics always are in danger of being over-generalized, because they cannot reflect localized conditions. But even in a period of high prosperity, there always are exceptions to an over-all picture.

If the mood to buy continues into 1959-and there is no reason to believe it will not continue - the new year will start with vastly more momentum than the dying year began. There will be no sales deficit to overcome next Christmas, as there was this year.

The oddity of the 1958 depression noted by all analysts was the refusal of the American people to be as gloomy about the economic setback as the experts were. Unemployment and shortened work time were limited in their impact to those affected directly. There was no general sense of despair and uncertainty, as there was in the '40s.

This suggested that the evolution of the economy may be producing enough reserve strength to withstand setbacks that once would have shattered popular confidence. The automobile industry may not be as all-powerful in determining how people are going to feel about conditions as it has been in the

The thing that statisticians cannot measure and opinion polls cannot determine with dependable accuracy is how people feel. Yet, the way people feel has everything to do with the way they behave in an economic sense.

When they feel confident, their confidence produces a good economic effect. When they lose confidence, that has a bad effect. But the cause of the economic effect is not entirely economic. It is also tinged with the psychological behavior of people in the mass which is still a mystery.

Whatever went into it during the Christmas buying season in 1958, what came out of it was surprisingly high rate of purchasing, all things considered. Buyers left retailers in most places with the happiest problem a businessman can hope to have - depleted inventories and bright prospects of being able to sell replacements.

More Distant Frontiers Of Knowledge

The possibility of new knowledge in outer space, if and when men learn how to get there and back, has been brought to attention by the professor of astrophysics in California Institute of Technology, Fritz Zwicky.

He thinks both Issac Newton and Albert Einstein may be proved wrong in their calculations about gravity and space. The proof. moreover, may not have to wait on man to get into outer space, in person. It may come from observations by earth-bound men. just as Newton and Einstein arrived at their hypotheses while using nothing more dramatic than their power of reason.

It is the possibility of new knowledge in outer space, however, that is the fascinating focus for most of us. For example, what could have a more tremendous effect on human thought than to learn that the earth is only one of many populated places in the uni-fustment of human concepts than to discover that science had miscalculated distances in the universe, or that many of man's firm beliefs about universal truth and law were without any basis in fact, once fact had ceased to be "provincial"?

Or what would require more radical read-

And when, if ever, would men recover from the shock of learning that they had been aeons learning to do in a small way what their counterparts elsewhere had known how to do beyond the reckoning of time - and that the earth had been passed by and overlooked because it was considered to be without any importance whatever in the universal scale of importance?

In the estimation of more advanced beings elsewhere, both the great Newton and the great Einstein, with their incredible power of reason, would be regarded as semi-retarded. There exists, after all, no guarantee that the only thinking ever done in the entire universe has been done by a handful of unusual specimens of life on earth.

Who's The Inept Politician Now?

Whether the Democrats blasting President Eisenhower for playing politics with the budget know it or not, they sound silly.

If the kind of politics they mean is the kind that puts the other fellow on the defensive before he can get in the first lick, the man they have been accusing of a lack of savvy has beaten them at their own game.

By taking his stand on the budget first, he has put them on the defensive. He has left them no choice but to scream that his arithmetic is unrealistic; that he cannot balance the budget at 77 billion dollars and that he should not be thinking about a budget in balance at all, because Democrats intend to keep it out of balance anyway.

When they say this, they confirm what he said about them when they swept the election in November - that they are coming to Washington to set up a spendthrift regime he can let them explain to the country what caught the old pros napping.

"That is exactly what we aim to do and we are hopping mad at Dwight D. Eisenhower for being opposed to it."

This may be good politics for Democrats. It may be better than the politics they accuse him of playing by getting in the first blow of the budget battle. But by putting them on the defensive - by making them explain why the budget cannot be balanced -the President has taken himself off the political spot and invited his opponents to make fools of themselves.

Between now and next June 30, while Democrats are unbalancing his balanced budget, they are doing. It will not be easy. It may not be popular, either. The inept politician

Hoffa Girds For Legal Battles

OTHER FEDERALS have been searching into reports that Hoffa has spent over $110,000 in political campaigns in five states.

These are the contributions of record. There may have been lots of other political handouts. The attorney general's aides report that they will present what they have to a grand jury sometime in Janu-

But this will be a long bout. Jimmy H. will be able to work out in some preliminaries long before he steps into another battle with "Justice." His first fight comes up at 10 a.m. on Jan. 5 in Judge F. Dickinson Letts' courtroom.

That morning the monitors through their chairman, Martin O'Donoghue, will present a 20-page document to the bench.

This will be a definitive work on Jim Hoffa's defiance of all comers, all probes, all orders. It will be "the findings of fact" ordered by the court when Judge Letis ruled that the monitors have the power to tell Hoffa where to disinfect.

JUDGE LETTS told Mr. O'Donoghue to get the facts - some 50 or 60 of them - and bring them in. They'd have come along earlier but Hoffa's dashing lawyer, Ed Bennett Williams, has slipped a disc and painfully asked for delay until next month.

On the morning of the 5th the judge will instruct Hoffa to take action on all the "findings of facts" of defiance.

If Hoffa disobeys, the monitors will petition the court for his removal. The judge has indicated this

Still Resisting

TANGIER, Va. (A) - Generaations after she was sent to the bottom of Chesapeaka Bay by the guns of the battleship New Hampshire in 1911, the historic ship San Marcos is still resisting ef forts to remove her as a menace to navigation. The wreckage is still within 20 feet of the surface after the Navy used 11 tons of explosives in the latest efforts. The ship has been the object of other military firepower operations including aerial bombing by Brig. Gen. Billy Mitchell.

New-type concrete brings you tomorrow's highways today!

The "feel of the road" is good and solid

... new-type concrete gives you the smoothest ride ever!

No annoying dips, no bothersome bumps. New-type concrete is as flat as modern engineering can make a pavement!

Today's concrete is bringing you highways unequalled for smoothness and driving comfort.

Only concrete can do this because only concrete can be precisely engineered to such a high degree of flatness and smoothness - as well as to meet every strength

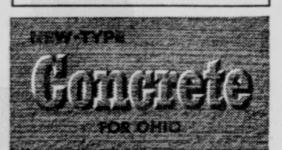

The very nature of concrete permits it to be placed and leveled to precise engineering standards - not just rolled or pounded into shape. New-type concrete will stay level and even for an expected life of 50 years and more . . . for two good reasons. One - is the concrete itself, ruggedly supported by a specially designed subbase. And two - a new process, called "air entrainment," that puts billions of tiny bubbles into every cubic foot of concrete. This prevents surface roughening from winter weather and de-icers. Concrete also provides dependable skid resistance, good night vision. Upkeep costs? They'll run as much as 60% lower than for asphalt. First cost is moderate. That's why concrete is the preferred pavetem and other primary highways.

Have You Driven Ohio's Newest Concrete Roads?

Ride over the new St. Clairsville Bypass on U.S. Route 40 or the Yellow Creek improvement on State Route 7. You'll see why concrete makes you feel so safe and comfortable behind changes or where the roof of an addition meets the main roof at an angle, there will be an intersection known as a valley.

Tips Offered On Repairing Of Flashing

This is always protected by a valley flashing which is made of metal and over which the shingles of the two roof sections rest. Because snow and ice are apt to stay in these valleys, they rust or corrode far more rapidly than do ordinary flashings. As a result, they require more care and often replacement.

The easy method for repairing a valley flashing is to cut a number of eight-inch squares out of copper, tin or even heavy tarpaper and bend them in a line from point to point as shown by the dotted line on the thumbnail sketch. This gives you a number of scales which can be shoved up under the shingles and over the flashing so that the lower point of the upper scale overlaps the scale beneath it. This offers an excellent water-shedding valley flash-

Naturally copper is the best metal to use. Next would be aluminum, then tin. There is no necessity for nailing the scales in place as the shingles will hold them. If the owner does not want to spend the money for metal scales. heavy tarpaper is quite effective years. If paper is used, the valley should be coated first with roof cement. And after the paper scales are in place they should be coated with asphalt paint or with the roof cement.

Steel Output, Consumption Due To Rise

Increase Expected After Holidays In Both Categories

CLEVELAND (AP) - Increases in steel consumption and production after the holidays were predicted by Steel Magazine in its issue out Monday.

"As business activity improves," the metalworking weekly said, "consumers will start using steel at a faster rate. Since their inventories are low, they'll have to offset faster consumption with increased buying."

Buyers still can get most steel products within three or four weeks, but face extended deliveries on cold-rolled sheets, the publication said. It added that if the automobile manufacturers start buying bigger tonnages the lesser consumers will have to wait about two months for delivery.

Steel said that several producers of galvanized and aluminum coated sheets already have closed their first quarter books because of the strong demand for these

The Christmas holiday resulted in a fall of 6 points in steelmaking operations last week to 69 per cent of rated capacity. Production totaled about 1,835,000 net tons.

Production of 8.6 million tons this month boosted the fourth quarter output to 26 million tons, Steel reported. Total production for the year reached almost 85 million

Dear Readers: Once in a blue Between The Lines moon I will devote an entire column to a single letter. I do this when the letter is, in my opinion, one of extraordinary interest to a great many people. Today the moon is blue.-ANN LANDERS.

Dear Ann: Why do you constantly advocate segregation? I am referring to your stand that elderly members of the family be shipped off to the Old Folk's home.

The problem of aged parents has been with us since the Stone Age. It has never been borne so lightly by any generation as the current one. And your advice, Mrs. Landers, hasn't done much to promote family peace and harmony.

Dear G.G.: You write so well. It's a shame you don't read.

This is a PROBLEM column. People who write usually do so because they are having trouble of one sort or another. In regard to aged parents, it is rare | body!" indeed that I get a letter saying "I just love my 82-year-old mother-in-law."

"Gramps is a joy to have around the house." Because of the nature of this column, I get the beefs - not the bouquets. People write when things are bad - not good.

In such cases I strongly advise the wife to get moral support from her clergyman. Often he can make the husband see the light. No woman should be a 24hour slave year after year to save her husband from needless guilt feelings.

In some instances the older person has lost contact with reality and is unable to identify his surroundings or the people who are caring for him at great personal sacrifice. Under these circumstances home care makes no sense whatever.

Not all older folks are a problem. Some are hale, hearty, cheerful, helpful and a source of genuine pleasure to those around them. If they went off to a home for the aged they would be sorely
